A Resistless Fire.

Fire and water gives an account of the recent conflagration in Boston, which may be taken as coming from an expert, and mentions a few interesting points. It is curious that the first alarm was given from the same box from which was sent out the alarm for the great fire in 1872, which also began in Kingston street, then occupied by small dwelling houses. In just one minute from the striking of the alarm an engine was on the spot, but the flames had burst from every window in the building, the Brown-Durrell store, before a line of hose could be laid. In a few moments fourteen more engines had arrived, but the heat of the fire was so intense that the solid streams of water from the hose turned into steam before they entered the windows, and the engines might as well have blown air at the flames. In twenty minutes the walls fell, and the fire crossed the two adjacent streets. All the engines in the city, thirty-three in number, were hurried to the spot, and help was summoned by telegraph from all the neighboring towns, and even from Springfield, a hundred miles away, and notwithstanding the heavy rain which prevailed during most of the time, nearly seven engines were assembled and pouring rivers of water on the fire before it was subdued.

The violet harvest in southern France and Italy is extremely good. Three trains daily bring huge cargoes of violets to Paris, packed in light fruit baskets. How Not to Hold a Sea Lion.

Yesterday morning the crew of an Italian fishing smack, named the Glorietta, captured a sea lion inside the Heads. It was a monster and must have been asleep, or else the fisherman could never have slipped a noose about its flippers and fastened it in such a manner that all the efforts of the seal to escape were ineffectual. The Italians, thinking of the future riches which would flow to them from the exhibition of such a curiosity, exerted themselves to render their capture a certainty. With much labor they shipped their prize and finally made fast to Fisherman's wharf about 10 o'clock, with the sea lion quietly settled in the hold of their little craft. The news of the advent of the little stranger drew a large crowd to the wharf, and much speculation was indulged in as to the best manner of getting the captive ashore.

Thomas Gilligan, who is now collector at the wharf, was one of the most active in giving advice, and, being some sort of an officer, his opinions were listened to with great deference. The time came when the sea lion had to be taken ashore, and the Glorietta was brought to the incline inside the dock, and active preparations were made for a transfer of the sea lion from the hold to the fisherman's shed.

Collector Gilligan was the self-appointed director of the proceedings, and he it was who carefully inspected the loop which secured the sea lion, and he it was who shouted "all ready" when a dozen of the brawny fishermen took hold of the ropes and tried to persuade his marine majesty to crawl up the incline to a place out of the way on top of the wharf. The sea lion about this time began to take in the proceedings and to make decided objections.

He evinced a very mulish disposition not to be urged, and displayed such a temper that the men on the rope determined to keep at a safe distance. The efforts of a dozen were, however, too much for him, and they had drawn him almost to the top when he made an unexpected flop and nipped the fisherman nearest him in the calf.

The Italian gave one yell, and all, with the exception of Collector Gilligan, let go the rope. He, gallant soul, held on, and suddenly found himself floundering in the bay. The sea lion had taken advantage of the demoralization of his captors and made for the water, and Gilligan, because of his unwillingness to let go of the rope, was made to follow him. The sea lion escaped and Gilligan is wrathily.—San Francisco Call.
